Artist Statement

Like many abstract artists, the absence of concrete subject matter forces me to spend more time contemplating how I will work. I allow the work to reveal itself to me, to see how all aspects of the painting interact. I do not have preliminary sketches because the work changes as I progress. I want to be open to what I see happening. Although I do not put objects in my work, I do draw quite a bit to develop the language of form and line, which eventually finds itself into the paintings. How the drawings translate to the paintings is organic and spontaneous.

I use the traditional abstract tools such as mark making and color to communicate with the viewer. I use various mark making techniques and tools, whether with a pencil, brush, or my hand. At this time I am exploring the possibilities of light through the contrast of dark and light values with color. I apply multiple layers of color while creating my works, allowing a rich, deeper color to be on the surface of the painting. Layers of color to come through to the surface, much like a veil to be revealed. While making my works, I utilize the visual vocabulary of Rothko, Turner, Martin, among others, to inform my use of color, while the lyricism that runs through the work is my own.
